STONE LEGENDS

A photograph of a stone niche set into a wall of rough-hewn stone. The niche is semi-circular at the top, with a decorative shell-shaped arch. Inside the niche, a classical stone urn stands on a pedestal. The urn is supported by two muscular figures (telamones) and is filled with a variety of colorful flowers and greenery. The entire scene is set against a background of a stone wall.

A niche is a recess in a wall, usually semicircular at the back, terminating in a half-dome. Often used as a place for a statue or urn. The Venus Calais (Unit ID 14138) is a stunning example.

Stone sculptures of the Gods were an important aspect of Aztec religious expression. Statues were placed before altars essential features of every Aztec household and were made to adorn shrines and temples or to be set up in the open air. The sculptures range from the miniature to the monumental in scale. The sculptors worked both in low relief and in the round, and often the two styles are inseparable, as statues commonly included scenes or symbols carved in relief.

Having gained popularity in the United States in the 1860s, Cast Stone had become widely accepted as an economical substitute for natural stone by the early decades of the 20th century. Now, it's considered an important historic material in its own right. While some use of cast stone may be dated to the Middle Ages, more recent efforts to replicate natural stone began in England and France at the end of the 18th century.

STONE LEGENDS

A photograph of a light-colored building facade. On the left, there is a decorative quatrefoil ornament. To the right, there is a window with a white frame and a decorative arch above it. The building has a textured surface and a dark horizontal band running across it.

Having four acute divisions of foils or rounded spaces divided by cusps, tangent to the inner circle of a larger arc, a Quatrefoil is a very unique ornamental surround.

The Nexus3 (Unit ID 95) makes an excellent addition to your home's exterior.
